

- 1) introduction, connection of culture, rhetorics and logic
 - a) culture and rethorics connected, but also do not relate ablitly of both
 - b) no generalization of connection bt r and c
 - c)dependent on the one hand, independet on the other hand
 - d) point out influence of culture on rhetorics
- 2) explain quote and connect to oshima
 - a)Aristotle has not been mexican, since his philosophy did not built upon spanish rhetorics
 - b)same philosophy with different culture backround?
 - c)different science because of wrong interpretation of rhetorics?
- 3) agree vs. disagree with quote...why, why not
- 4) conclusion
 - a) sum up opinion

Different cultures, same philosophy?

It is obvious that there are many different cultures in the world and that every culture has its own rhetorical system. Culture and rhetorics are well connected on the one hand since language is influencing culture. However, on the other hand rhetorics does not necessarily explain culture. Indeed, every individal belongs to a cutlure and speaks a certain language. Nonetheless, once culture is not determined by language profecieny. As a result, one should not generalize the connection between culture and rhetorics. One langage has different focuses than another language. Still, a similar philosophy is present. The master of Philosophy, Aristotle did mainly focus on human being and explained his thesis due to different approaches. The assumption that he would come from a different culture, offers the question whether his theory of philosophy would have been changed. As mentioned before there is a connection between culture and rhetorics and if aristotle would have been mexican, he would have changed his approaches of philosophy in the first place. Consequently, science and philosophy could be seen differently today. However, if there is a connection between diverse cultures and diverse rhetorics, maybe the science and philosophy would still be the same. I agree that Aristotle was influenced by his culture to determinine his theroy and I am convinced that his language abilities would have been different in a different culture. Nevertheless, I think that the content of what any culture wants to verbally express is the same. The meaning is shown via different languages and the ideas for a specific opinion is influenced by one's culture. Same ideas as an input should end up as the same output even though different cultures influence thoughts and ideas. As Oshima concludes that noone who has the actual rhetoric is simultaneous a brilliant writer or speaker supports the fact that rhetoric can influence theroies but does not need to do so. Aristotle could have been educated the same way in Mexico with different influences of cultures and a diverse rhetoric, nonetheless he would have had his great theory on philosophy. In conclusion i can say, that I do not agree with the statement that our science and philosophy would be changed if Aristotle would have been Mexican. Diverse cultures always influence one's culture but never stop one's personal quality to interprete and identify theories like Aristotle did.