

there she comes again...what is going on with her today? she is smiling so something has happened in the morning i believe. Her lips are redish her eyes are open like she is checking me out. me her computer. are u kidding? well let me see which program she is using, maybe i can figure it out. well, it looks like she is using skype and talking to someone...no, she is writing to someone. chatting is the modern word for it...well i guess i am getting old. whenever she comes again using the keyboard for her communication with others...but never thinks about my feeling as her computer. i have to deal with all that. deal with her face which is either focused on the screen or focused on the board. however, never focused on me as her option to stay in contact with the world. anyways, now she is just chatting with an old friend. there was a time she used to live abroad and i did not see her for a while. i finally had the chance to recover from her cruel way to push the letter on my computer. However, i have to say that i missed her a little bit. it is nice to see her, sometimes still sleeping and just being happy to check her mail for 2 minutes. then some other time she is just meeting some friends to exchange information and new exciting news. at one point she was preparing for a term paper and it was sad to see how she felt. i was tickled by all the papers around me which i believe she needed for her work. moreover, i was totally overwhelmed with all the windows she opened for further sources for her work. she did not think about me at that time and i was getting really upset. imagine that...i have had to deal with multiple different windows., a couple word documents, and i was still bothered by the papers around me. how bad was that. anyways now whenever i look at her i have to say that it could have happened much worse. i talk to my new friend upstairs the other day and he just told me that his user listens to crazy music every single day, which makes him feel horrible. it is interesting to see how my owner only listens to quiet music and how nice it is to even listen to that as well. therefore i try to be happy about it and just wish i could tell her sometimes to take care of me, since i am going to be an old lady soon. Her problem sometimes is to give me enough rest. she forgets to turn me off which means that i am running all night long even though i could rest instead. Further, she comes early in the morning and tries to check her e mails quickly and then leave me again. She never talks to me and she never thinks about me having feeling about how she treats me at some point. Whatever, what can i do about it. I hope she will continue using me though. I know she does have a different computer as well but she still uses me...i think that is great. I realizes also that everything she is writing is going pretty quick since she does not have too much time. That's also why i have to deal with the abbreviations all the time. i think they are ok unless everybody understand what they mean. however i think that she should avoid them sometimes. They are just getting too modern for me and i am not sure how much longer i can handle them. Then whenever she tries to write a term paper she needs every additional program i can offer because she needs correctness. How weird is that. E mail do not need to be written correctly, but term paper need to be written perfectly. I wonder what secret is behind that. But maybe at some point she starts talking to me and i may now. right now she is sitting in front of me writing some stuff she is supposed to do for school. whenever it turns that way, she gets away from e mail or chatting, her face starts to become more serious and i am wondering whether i have to worry about that. one day she started crying in front of the computer because of a paper she was supposed to write and i think then i really prefer the e mails with the abbreviations and different language...only to see her happy smile. Also the happy smile always reminds me of the time she is reading and not using my keyboard at all. I can only see her smiling without moving her fingers and it is nice to know that she is actually reading something funny. Moreover, it is a relaxing period for me so i do not have to worry about giving her the correct words, grammatical structures or misspelled words. All in all i think i should be happy to have her as my user only because i know that i am not forgotten even though i am an old computer.